Marcin J. Leszczyński studied philosophy at the University of Lodz. His interests lie in the philosophy and history of biology, and his approach to these subjects is informed by the work of Georges Canguilhem and Charles T. Wolfe. He has also studied seventeenth-century medical thought, with a particular focus on Thomas Willis. In his spare time, he loves listening to music, occasionally composes music of his own, plays board games, and goes for walks.